A new service the Library offers to its users, is the compilation of Subject Guides. Research librarians are available to assist researchers identify materials of interest in particular subject areas, in the form of Subject Guides. These guides list primary and secondary resources of relevance to a particular subject and provide details about tertiary and quaternary resources, such as bibliographies, library collections and catalogues. Thus, Subject Guides are usually not limited to resources in a particular library, but aim to provide information about as many resources as possible which are available to a library's user group.
